DAD GRADUATES AT CONCORDIA WHILE DAUGHTER TAKES DEGREE AT THE OTHER UNIVERSITY

Michael Resin, a 59-year-old student who came third in the High School Leaving provincial exams in the Depression years, graduates with an MBA at Concordia's Fall Convocation November 21.

His youngest daughter Sherri Torjman graduates with her Masters of Social Work degree at McGill during Fall Convocation ceremonies Wednesday, November 17.

After only a few months of undergraduate studies at McGill in the early '30's, Resin had to drop out and it was not until 1967 that he took up university studies again.

Resin is a stockbroker at Levesque, Beaubien and says he's a better stockbroker for his studies: "I believe I am a better financial expert than I was."

His other business and professional interests over the years have included publishing. He founded the photography magazine Photo Age in 1960 and at its peak, circulation across Canada reached a respectable 20,000. The magazine ceased publication in 1968, when it was faced with rising costs and Resin felt he could not continue to maintain its established quality.

At Sir George Williams, he caught the print bug again and became editor of the Commerce Faculty's student magazine Commerce Perspective which tackled business and economic issues.

For all his professional interest in photography Resin says he could never make a hobby of it. Until now: with three grandchildren, he wants to get clicking and keep in touch with his far-flung offspring who live on the west coast. His son, a doctor, lives in California; his older daughter who is a social worker lives in Vancouver.
